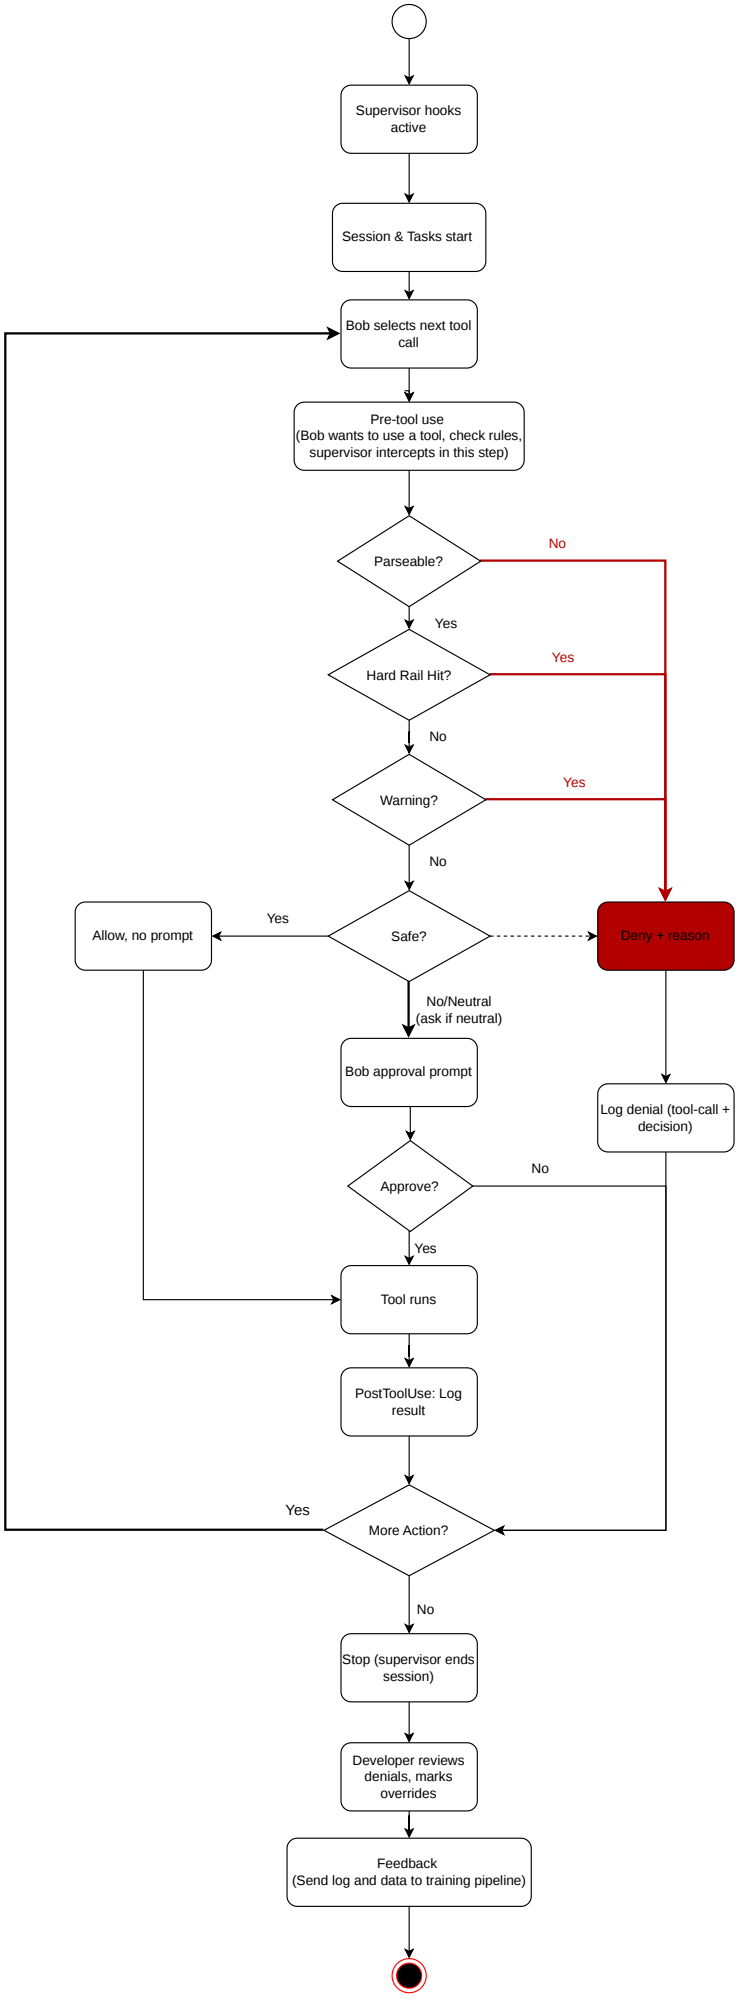
In-Bob Workflow



Human Override: When the supervisor denies an action, that call stays denied and the session continues. After the session ends, the developer can review the denials and mark any that should have been allowed. This gives developers time to check whether the action was really needed and safe. An override is only a feedback signal for the training pipeline; it never unlocks the call.

Neutral fallback: if testing shows Bob doesn't display its approval prompt for Neutral actions, Neutral is sent to "Deny + reason" (reason: "needs developer approval") instead, so the system stays fail-closed.
